

APPENDIX B

List of Pennsylvania Archaeologists,
Consulting Firms,
and Other Sources of Professional Assistance

Attached is a list of consulting, academic, institutional, and avocational archaeologists and organizations in Pennsylvania who may be able to help you implement a tabletop program, or speak to your students, or otherwise assist you in integrating archaeology into your curriculum. It's by no means comprehensive; there may be other archaeologists out there with an interest in helping with such a project, these are just some names that you can use as a starting point. Try contacting the person who's closest to your school district and asking for help or advice. Most of these folks are very busy people, so try to give them as much notice as possible if you're asking for their time. In general, you'll find these people to be bright, articulate, and full of enthusiasm for their subject and your students!

There are two statewide organizations in Pennsylvania that serve as advocates for the Commonwealth's archaeological heritage; the Society for Pennsylvania Archaeology (SPA) and the Pennsylvania Archaeological Council (PAC). The SPA has chapters across the state, with enthusiastic and experienced professional and avocational members who can help you with a tabletop program, and PAC has individual members, all of whom are professional archaeologists, in every part of Pennsylvania. You should contact both organizations, and they in turn can put you in touch with chapters and/or members in your local area.
